“The Queen of the Carolina Sea Islands”, Beaufort was formally founded in 1711, and is the second oldest city in South Carolina after Charleston. A mere 22 years after Christopher Columbus discovered America in 1492, Spanish explorer Capt. Pedro de Salaza of Hispaniola landed on what is now Parris Island (originally named “Wambahee Island” by the Yemassee Indians) in 1514, becoming only the second European in history to set foot on North American soil (Ponce de Leon had landed in St. Augustine one year earlier). Capt. de Salaza named the area “Santa Elena”, or “St. Helena” and built a makeshift settlement on what the island.

Since then, ten flags have flown over the Beaufort area, including those of Spain, France, England, Switzerland, and Scotland, and the name of Wambahee Island has been changed, first to “Port Royal Island”, then to “Parris Island” in honor of Colonel Alexander Parris, who once owned the island. The early Spanish explorers (called “conquistadors”) named the area “Florida” (Spanish for “florid”, or “flowery” – used in the sense of “choice, fertile, lush,” etc.), and it was the center of Spain’s North American empire for about 75 years.
